Trends in feminism and gender equality in Iceland

Time has been on the side of egalitarian gender attitudes in industrialized Western countries, especially in Iceland that ranks the highest in the World Economic Forum Global Gap Index in terms of economic, educational, political and health equality. Yet, serious gender inequalities persist, including a wide gender pay gap and relatively traditional division of household labor. In my talk, I discuss the main issues in the struggle for gender equality facing the women's movement in contemporary Iceland, such as the gendered work market, the wage gap, the division of household labor and adolescents' attitudes towards gender equality.
